Why You Should Utilize COURTROOM ALTERNATIVES LLC When Going Through a Divorce

Divorce is never easy. Even when the word amicable is attached to it, people rarely know what they're in for – unless they've been through a divorce before. If their previous experience was a contentious, litigated divorce, then they may be ready for the battle to come – but they also tend to be too ready, often turning even harmless negotiations into vicious battles because they are determined to maintain the upper hand. For those who have never been through a divorce, it is often disorienting how quickly someone you once – and still may – care deeply for can become your biggest enemy. Especially, when there are children involved, the emotional and financial damage of a litigated divorce can be devastating.

Divorce is never easy, but it can be easier. The secret is in not assuming the only way to emerge independent with your rights and assets protected is to pick up the litigation hammer and assume everything in your path is a nail. A Collaborative Divorce involving professional mediation between spouses can reduce the financial and emotional cost of a divorce, speed up the process, preserve what is left of your relationship with each other, and protect children from the emotional fallout that is inevitable when you walk into a courtroom. Going one step further, a Team Approach to Collaborative Divorce can make the process not just less contentious, but even positive and constructive.

While taking the step to work out your divorce issues using a collaborative approach with mediation is an incredibly important first step towards minimizing the damage of divorce and smoothing the process into a more civilized and emotionally stable one, it's not uncommon for the spouse to feel segregated.

Advantages of the Team Approach

While collaborative divorce experts will explain the traditional mediation process, very few will be able to use the team approach of bringing seasoned professionals to the table and having these distinct points of view helps the process invaluabley:

- This creates a comfort level that often isn't possible with just one authoritative mediation professional.
- The Team Approach increases the level of positive experience in the room. Mediators with lengthy resumes have been involved in different mediations, and bring different lessons and ideas to the table.
- Financial advisors are available to help each party understand and equitably divide the assets of the marriage.
- Counselors are accessible to assist children and parents deal with the emotional aftermath of dissolution of such an important relationship.
- Attorneys may be obtained to provide legal advice.

Other professionals can be added to the team if necessary – often a counselor specifically trained in dealing with young children can be involved as well. The key is ensuring that each is a neutral participant, without bias or prior relationship to either of the parties.

The professional staff at Courtroom Alternatives LLC create a safe and comfortable environment for the mediation process to take place. The win-win approach to analyzing conflict and seeking amicable solutions has allowed Courtroom Alternatives LLC to be one of the successful mediation practices in the area.
